

THE VATICAN MUSEUMS

The Vatican Museums contain one of the largest art collections in the world spread out over 9 miles, with about 1400 rooms, chapels and galleries, which were once part of the Vatican Palace.

Pope Julius II started the collection in the early 1500s and opened it to the public because he wanted to promote knowledge of art history and culture.

The original collection included sculptures that were located in the Octagonal Court, but it was far from the size it is nowadays. Pope Clemente XIV and Pius VI, both in the 1700s, set up the curatorial section, while Pius VII, in the early 1800s, considerably expanded the collections of Classical Antiquities.

In the middle of the 1800s, Gregory XVI founded the Etruscan Museum which the finding from the archeological excavations in Etruria. He later established the Egyptian Museum, too. In the late 1900s, Pius IX added the Lateran Profane Museum and the Pio Christian Museum, which encompasses ancient Christian sarcophagi and the Hebrew Lapidary which contains inscriptions from ancient Hebrew cemeteries.

Pius XI, in the early 1900s, established the Missionary-Ethnological Museum while Paul VI added the Collection of Modern and Contemporary Religious Art, in the late 1900s.
